THE DOG THAT WOULDN'T FIGHT

Big Blaze joined his new dog-sled team by walking quietly into the group of hostile huskies, and stretching out with a big yawn.

A big cream-colored husky began to circle Blaze, stiff-legged, growling deep in his throat. The others stood back expectantly, hoping for a good battle. But Blaze ignored the other dog, closing his eyes with complete disinterest. And with that his reputation was ruined for good.

A low murmur spread through the group of big dogs. A new dog was expected to try to throw his weight around. Big Blaze was huge and powerful looking, but if he wouldn't fight, he was probably a coward!

All through the summer when the dog team had no work, Blaze was an object of scorn. None of the dogs hesitated to snatch food right out from under him, or bump into him in their rough and tumble play, or wake him rudely from a deep nap. Blaze never protested. He was always polite and good natured.

Then one day a new dog was led limping to join the team. As soon as he saw him Blaze let out a yelp of joy.

"Klondike!" he bellowed.

"Big Blaze!" the other bellowed in return. "We all wondered where they sent you! Boy!! You and me together. We'll run this outfit!"

"Oh no you won't!" The cream-colored dog raced up snarling, shouldering Blaze aside. "I'm boss here, until somebody proves otherwise."

He circled the badly limping Klondike, growling viciously. The pack watched intently. They sensed that the lead dog meant to take out his frustrated hatred of Blaze on Blaze's friend. Klondike started to circle, and then his bad leg collapsed under him! The cream-colored dog leaped!

But he leaped right into the broad, unmoving chest of Big Blaze! And suddenly Blaze was fighting in cold fury. He parried his opponent's thrusts with his chest, closed in quickly, and the cream-colored dog was flung high into the air. Blaze's growl was blood-chilling as he lunged forward. The other dogs strained forward, suddenly frozen with horror.

"Blaze!" shrieked Klondike. "Dont!"

Blaze abruptly brought himself up short. The cream-colored dog lay stunned in defeat. The others were stunned in disbelief.

"Blaze, remember you promised never to fight again," Klondike scolded. "That's why you were sold away from our team . . . because you almost killed that rotten bully in a fight."

"I remember," Blaze said bitterly. The crowd pressed forward, apologizing profusely. Blaze was happy, but he wouldn't show it. He turned away with a big yawn, and his reputation was made forevermore.

CASPER, THE FRIENDLY GHOST

GEORGE THE LONELY GIRAFFE

George the giraffe was lonely. He was the only giraffe in the zoo, and he just couldn't get close to the other animals. Which wasn't surprising, since he towered way up in the air.

Whenever anyone spoke to him, he spoke on a line with George's knees, and George would have to say, "I'm sorry, I didn't hear you. Would you repeat that, please?"

Now, animals hate to repeat themselves, and soon nobody spoke to George.

Poor George looked so lonely and miserable that every once in a while one of the nicer animals would try to speak loudly enough for George to hear. But then, right in the middle of a good story George's voice would float down, "Would you repeat that, please?" and everyone would get annoyed again.

Then one day a very tall crate was wheeled into the zoo, and when it was opened, George was introduced to his new mate, Ginny.

George's lonely days were over. Ginny was a talker. She talked endlessly, about her family, about the jungle, about her trip to the zoo, about the other animals in the zoo, about everything.

And because she was almost as tall as George, he could hear every single word she said.

The other animals could hear every word she said, too. At first they were happy for George, but as days went by and Ginny never stopped talking, they became fidgety. They looked up at George's happy face and wondered why he didn't make her stop talking, at least for a little while. "He couldn't stop her if he wanted to," said the hyena. "I can't make my wife stop giggling, can I?"

Day after day Ginny talked and finally the other animals began to notice that George's happy look was fading. "Oh-oh!" they whispered to one another. "He's had enough! Pretty soon he'll be wishing for the good old days!"

And at last, one day, with everyone watching, George's face took on a sly look. Ginny didn't notice it. She just kept talking: "You know what I'd like, George? A red hat to wear on Sundays, when all the visitors come. Don't you think I'd look pretty in a red hat, dear? I know just the model I'd like. I saw it last week on that tall lady in front of the lion's cage and I knew right then . . ."

George seemed to be stretching taller and taller, higher and higher above Ginny's moving mouth. The look on his face was very sly. "I'm sorry, dear," he said at last. "I didn't hear you. Would you repeat that, please?"

JEST FOR FUN

We let ourselves go on this page, telling you some stories we've heard jest for fun!

* * *

Dannie met his friend Willie on Main Street and said to him: "I used to be a 90-pound weakling and whenever I went to the beach, a 220-pound bully would throw sand in my face. So I took a body-building course, and now I weigh 220 pounds!"

"So what happened?" asked Willie.

"I went to the beach yesterday," said Dannie, "and a 440-pound bully kicked sand in my face!"

* * *

"What are you thinking about?" Bobby asked his sister, Zelda.

"Oh, nothing," said Zelda.

"Then get your mind off yourself!" said Bobby.

* * *

"Let's go swimming," Petey said to his teen-age sister, Betsy.

"I can't!" answered Betsy. "A moth has been at my bathing suit."

"So what!" said Petey. "He probably starved to death!"

It was midnight, and Mrs. Wilson awoke with a start. There was someone in the room. "One move and I'll plug you," said the voice. "I'm looking for your husband's money."

"Wait a minute," said Mrs. Wilson, "I'll put on the light and hunt with you!"

Mr. Cheapsmith went into a restaurant for dinner.

"Do you charge for bread?" he asked the waiter.

"No, sir," answered the waiter.

"Do you charge for butter?" asked Mr. Cheapsmith.

"No, sir," answered the waiter.

"Okay," smiled Mr. Cheapsmith. "I'll have some bread and butter!"

"Ah," said the waiter, "for bread and butter, we charge!"

The teacher asked: "Steve, can you tell me which month has twenty-eight days?"

"Sure!" answered Steve. "All of them!"

* * *

"I know just as much as my teacher," Tommy proudly told Selma.

"Really?" said Selma. "How do you know?"

"He said it was impossible to teach me anything!" said Tommy.

"Say 'Ah!'" the doctor told his patient.

"No, doctor," said the patient. "I didn't come in for an examination. I just want to pay my bill!"

"Ahhhhh!" said the doctor.

"Did you give the fish fresh water today?" Mrs. Smith asked her son, Joey.

"No Mom," said Joey. "They haven't finished the water I gave them yesterday!"

WENDY, THE GOOD LITTLE WITCH

SILENCE IS GOLDEN

It was going to be a perfect Sunday for Carter Snodgrass. He had planned everything, and his wife, Ellen, and his son, Silas, had promised to cooperate.

"Remember," Carter told them as he prepared to retreat to his bedroom, "I want silence today. Complete silence."

"Of course, Carter," Ellen told him, "it'll be just as you wish it."

"Sure, Daddy," said Silas, "don't worry about us."

"OK then," smiled Carter, "I'm going to my bedroom now to enjoy peace and complete silence."

Carter picked up the Sunday papers, his favorite magazine and some potato chips to crunch on and marched up to his bedroom.

He fell across his bed and started to flip through the papers.

"This sure is the life," he told himself. "The papers and complete silence. I'm sure lucky to have a wife and kid who'll cooperate and give me exactly what I want."

He was looking at the funnies when he suddenly looked up from the paper and glanced at his watch.

"Uh, uh," he said. "It's three o'clock! That's the time Ellen starts using the sewing machine. Oh, that hum will be awful!"

But even at three-fifteen, the machine hadn't been started. "What a wife I have," Carter smiled, "she doesn't even do her sewing when she knows I want quiet!"

But then another worried look came across Carter's face. At three-thirty, Silas would start his piano lessons.

"Oh, this'll just kill my day!" he thought. So Carter waited with clenched fists, his ears preparing to fight off the sounds of the pathetic piano. But Carter got a wonderful surprise. Silas had skipped his piano playing to give his father a full day of silence.

Carter returned to his reading again and to the happiness of the silence. But then he realized that it was time for Ellen's favorite radio program, then her telephone call from Mrs. Wilson, then for Silas' shower. But his ears never heard the sounds of any of them. Yes, everyone was helping him gain a day of silence!

But through all of this, Carter Snodgrass had realized one terrible thing. While he waited and waited for the sounds to interrupt his silence, he had not been able to read his paper, his magazine or to munch on his potato chips!

"What's the use," he said to himself. "The reason I keep listening for their sounds is that I WANT to hear them! I may as well go downstairs and join them — and the dickens with that restful silence!"

So Carter ran down the steps, calling, "Ellen, Silas! Here I am! I don't want to..."

Carter stopped because he got no answer. No one was there. There was nothing but a note that said: "Carter. We went for a drive so you can have your quiet. We'll see you later!"

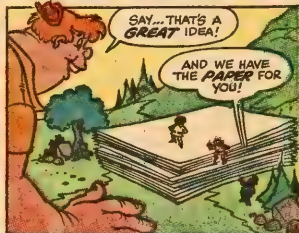

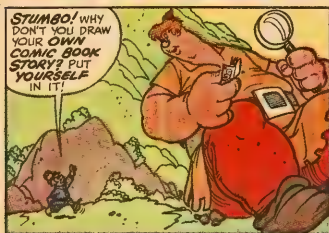

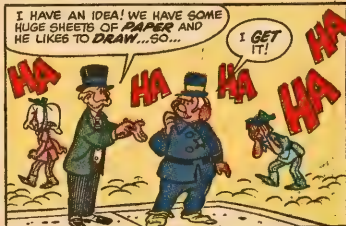

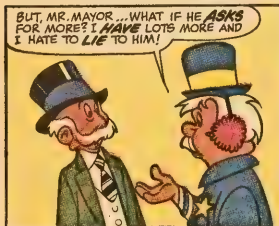

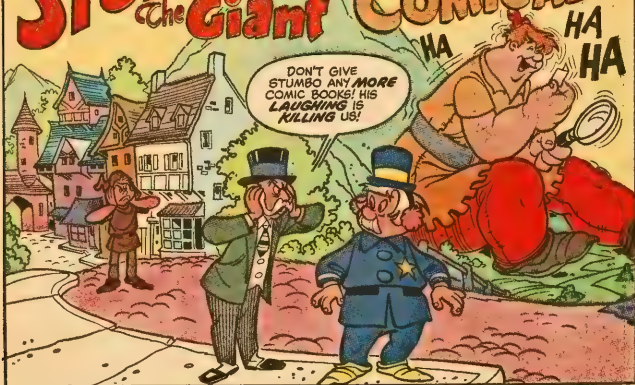

So Carter sat unhappily amidst the quiet... still waiting for a sound... the sound of the door-bell that would bring his family home!
